Guidelines for Book Reviews:

A good review will carefully and succinctly summarize the main points of the book, and also indicate the strengths and weaknesses of its scholarship. Situate the book in current scholarship and indicate directions for future research.

Please remember that you are addressing an interdisciplinary audience, so indicate what the author has accomplished in her or his own discipline, but also what is useful for other disciplines—literature, European history, world history, women's studies, art, music, religious studies, history of rhetoric, history of science, etc.

Please keep your review to 1000-1500 words.

Please send your review electronically to emwj@miami.edu

Format

Begin the review with a headnote that contains all pertinent information, for example:

End the review with your name and institution or the designation "independent scholar."

Reviews should not include footnotes, but can use parenthetical citations for other works if necessary. Cite the page number only within parentheses: (25) rather than (p. 25).

Please follow United States, not European, punctuation rules. Reviews will be edited for spelling, punctuation, formatting, and unclear or awkward language. Reviewers may be asked to clarify, shorten, or expand their review.

Please include a contributor's note at the end of the file.
